Summary: A story of three Spartans, three Covenant Seperatists, and how they changed history. This project has been cancelled. Read inside for more information.

1. Prologue

August 7, 2517.

Central Park, New York, Earth.

It was a Saturday, kids were out playing, many at Central Park. The children were happy, for here on Earth, there was no cause for worry. The wars were far away, the Earth the safest place for Humanity. So the children can play, not a care in the world.

Our story is about three children in particular. They were lying next to each other, staring at the sky. Two were male, the other female.

"You ever wonder," the blonde-haired boy asked, "what you're gonna do when you grow up?"

"Nope," the brown-haired boy replied.

"Not really," the black-haired girl responded.

"Me neither," the blonde said. He stood up and looked at the other two. "But whatever I do, it'll be with you two!"

"Yeah!" Both replied, laughing and playing.

"So, these are the three?"

"Affirmative ma'am, just as requested."

A woman and man were observing the children from afar, in order to not disturb them. The women had black hair blowing in the wind, her blue eyes protected by her glasses. The other, a Lieutenant in his twenties. The women looked back at the information she had on the children.

"Hunter Hadsen," she looked at the blonde child.

"Blake Jones," she looked at the brown-haired child.

"Lira Hikari," she looked at the girl.

"Three suitable candidates, they will be heroes."

2. Author's Note: Story Cancelled
